"How far is it to the Emerald City?"

"I do not know . . . But it is a long way and it will take you many days. The country here is rich and pleasant, but you must pass through rough and dangerous places before you reach the end of your journey."

Dorothy started along the road of yellow brick . . . When she had gone several miles she thought she would stop to rest, and so climbed to the top of the fence beside the road. There was a great cornfield beyond the fence, and not far away she saw a scarecrow, placed high on a pole.

"She threw her arms around the Lion's neck and kissed him, patting his big head tenderly. Then she kissed the Tin Woodsman, who was weeping in a way most dangerous to his joints. But she hugged the soft, stuffed body of the Scarecrow in her arms instead of kissing his painted face, and found she was crying herself at this sorrowful parting from her loving comrades."

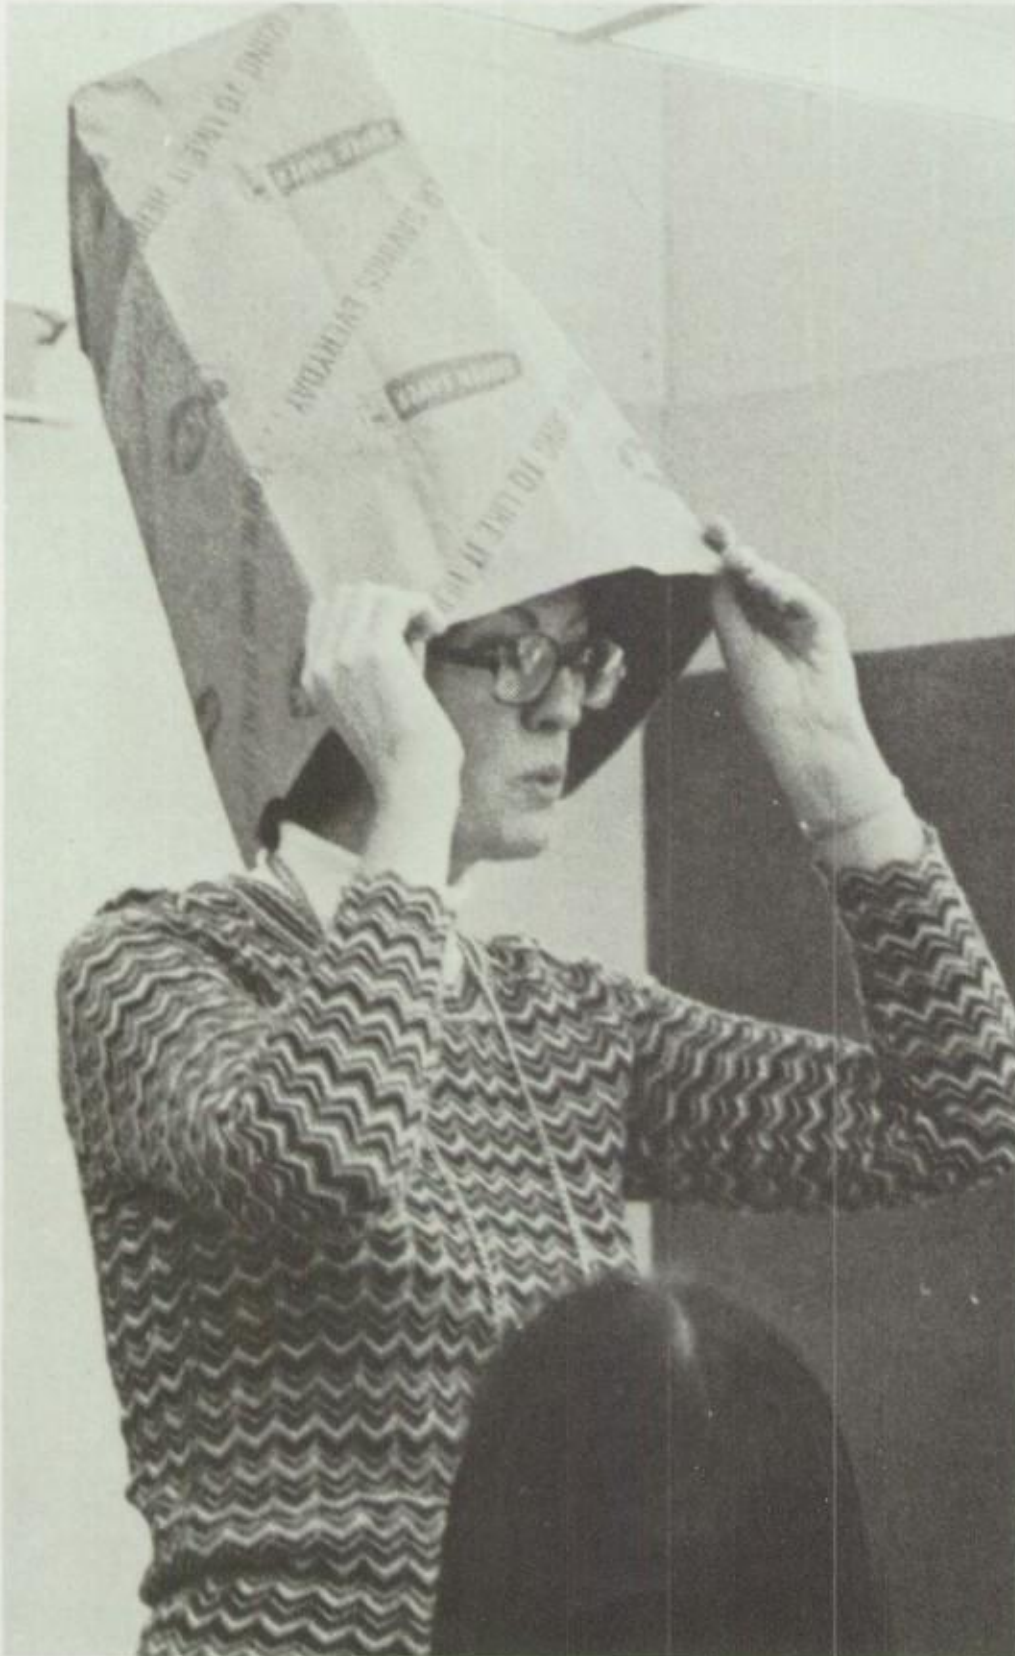

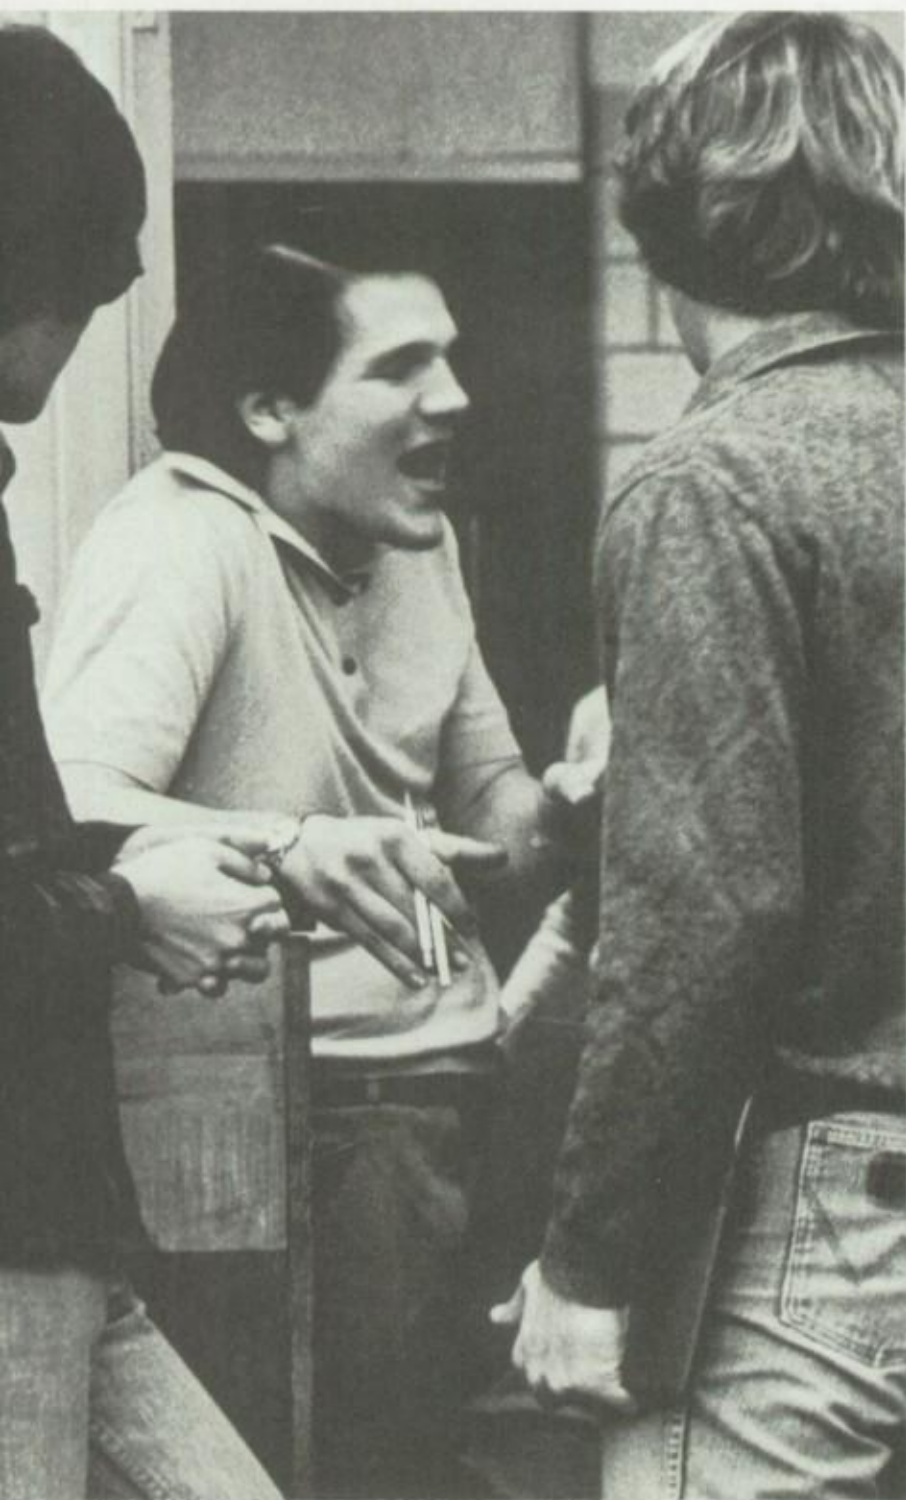

While she stood looking eagerly at the strange and beautiful sights, she noticed coming toward her a group of the queerest people she had ever seen. They were not as big as grown folks ... but neither were they very small. All were oddly dressed ...

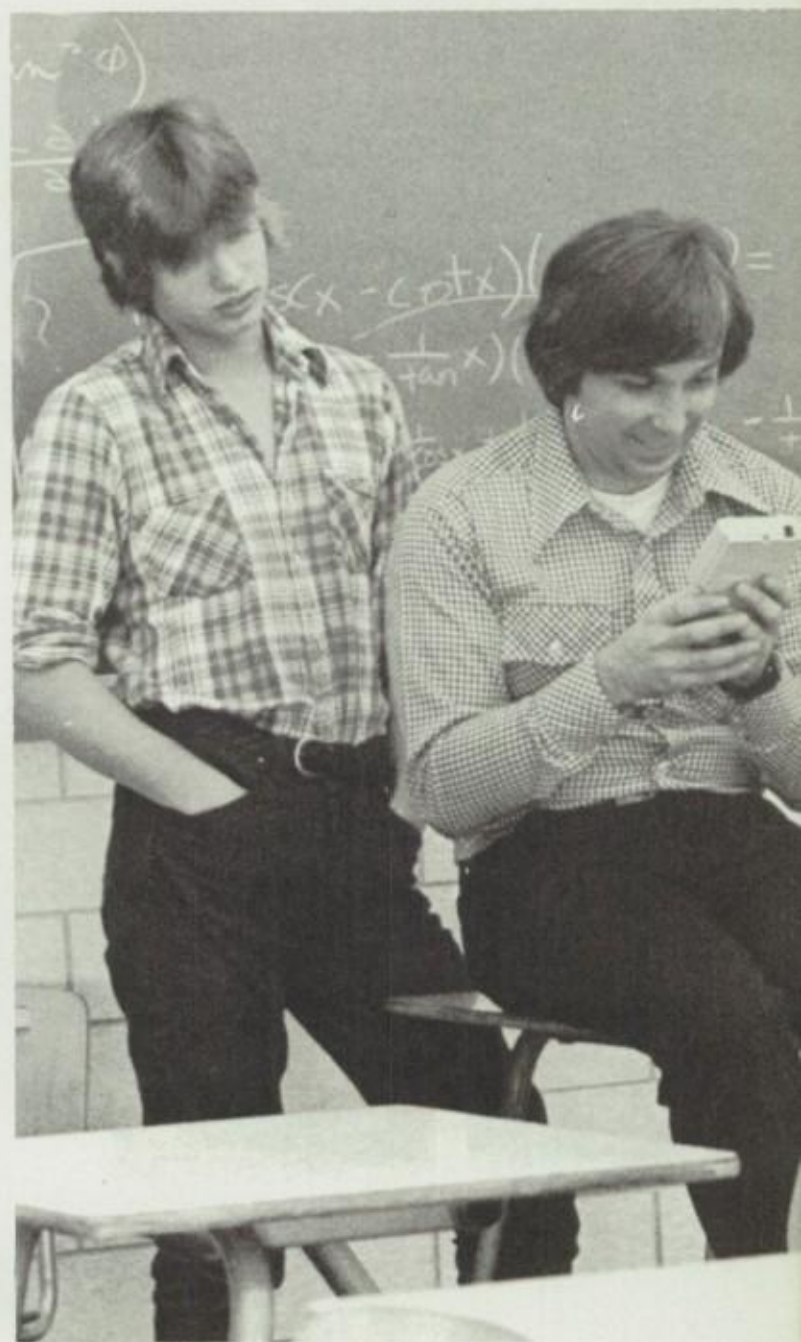

"There was great rejoicing among the yellow Winkies, for they had been made to work very hard during many years for the wicked witch, who had always treated them with great cruelty. They kept this day as a holiday, then and ever after, and spent the time in feasting and dancing."

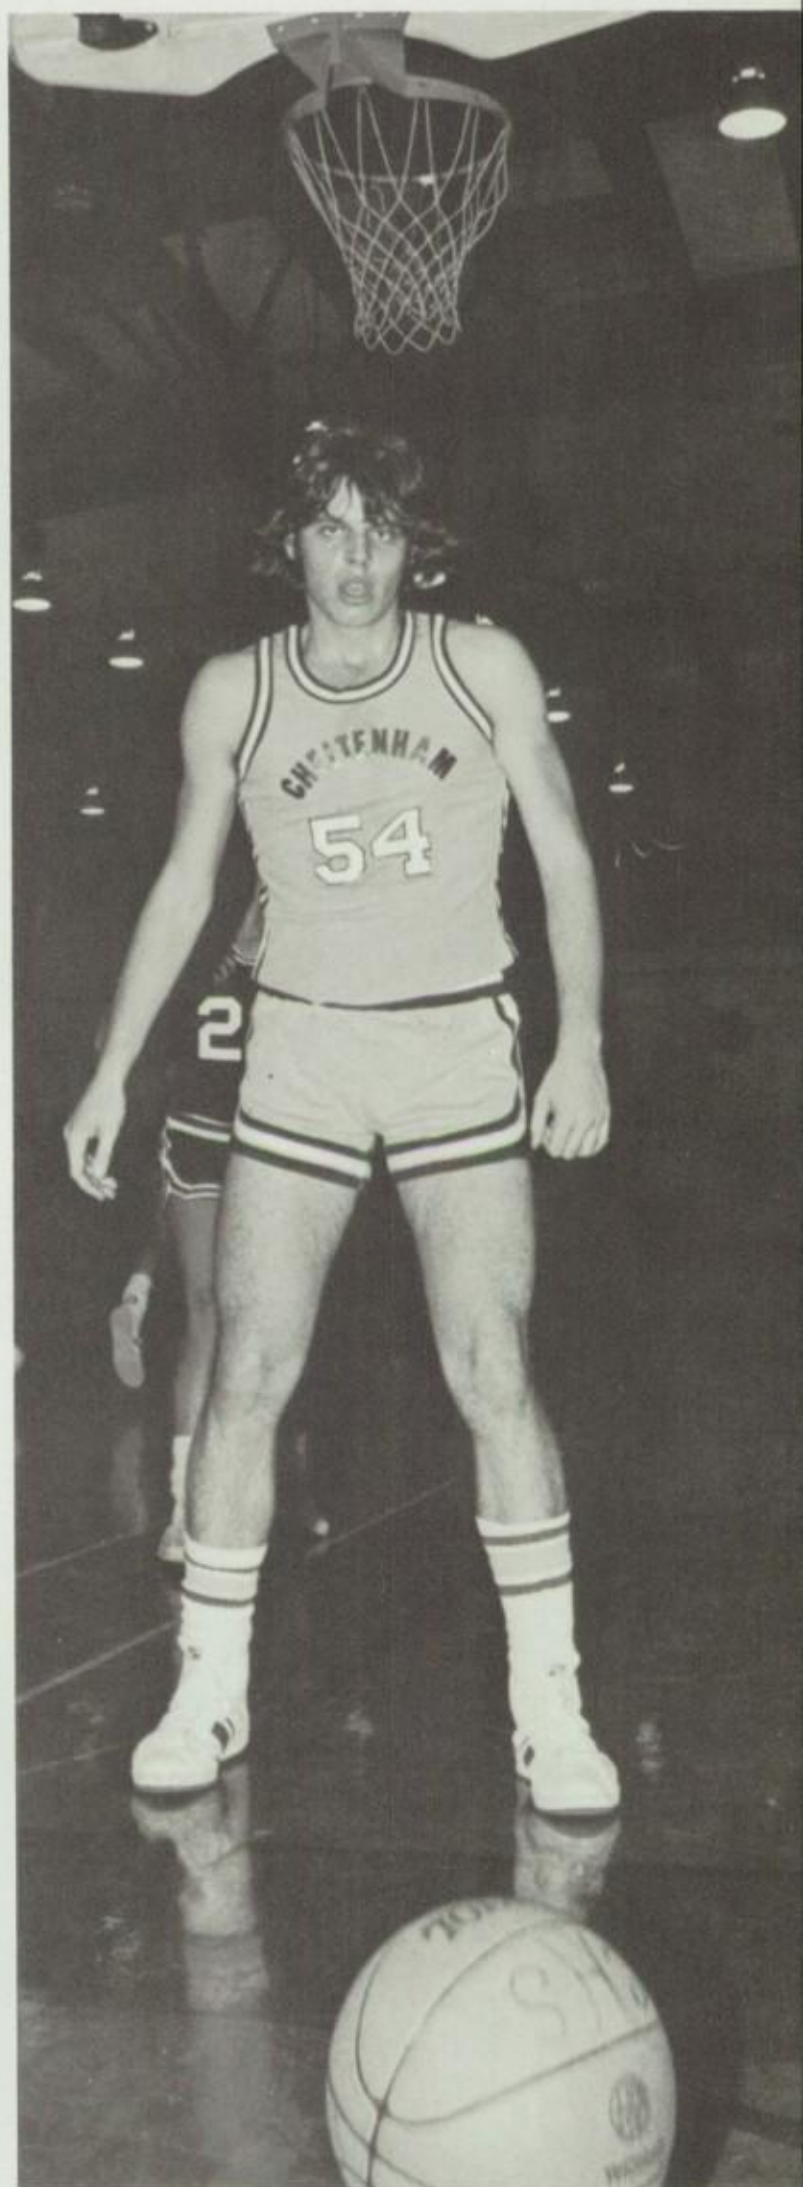

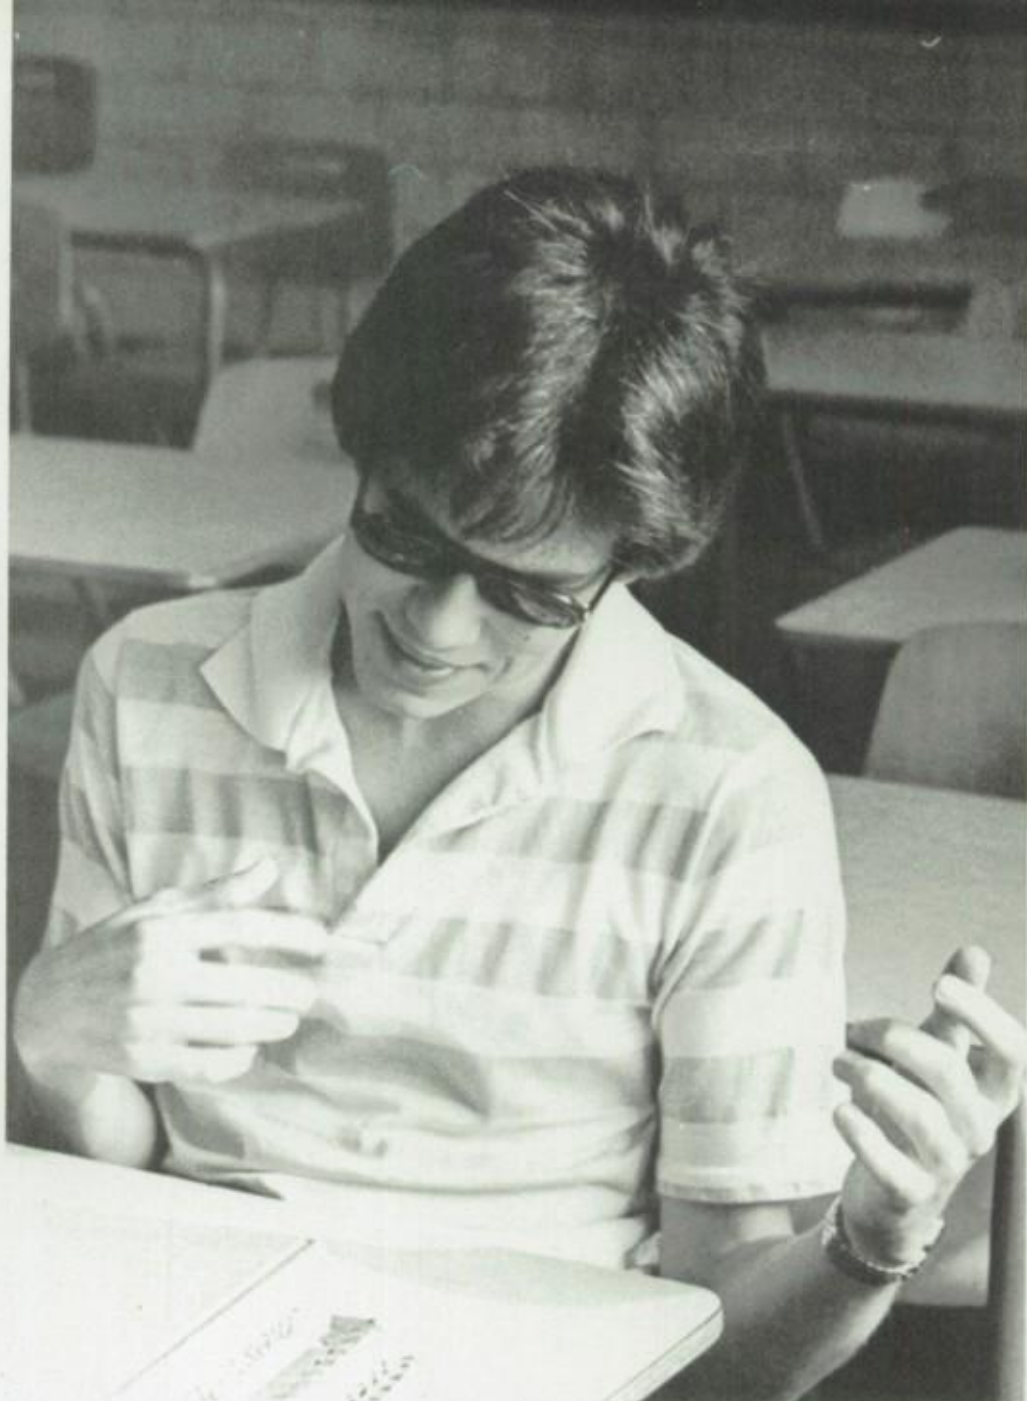

The road began to be rough, and the walking grew ever so difficult that the Scarecrow often stumbled over the yellow bricks, which were very uneven. Sometimes they were broken or missing altogether, leaving holes that Toto jumped across. As for the Scarecrow, having no brains he walked straight ahead, and so stepped into the holes and fell at full length on the hard bricks. It never hurt him, however, and Dorothy would pick him up and set him upon his feet again . . . "

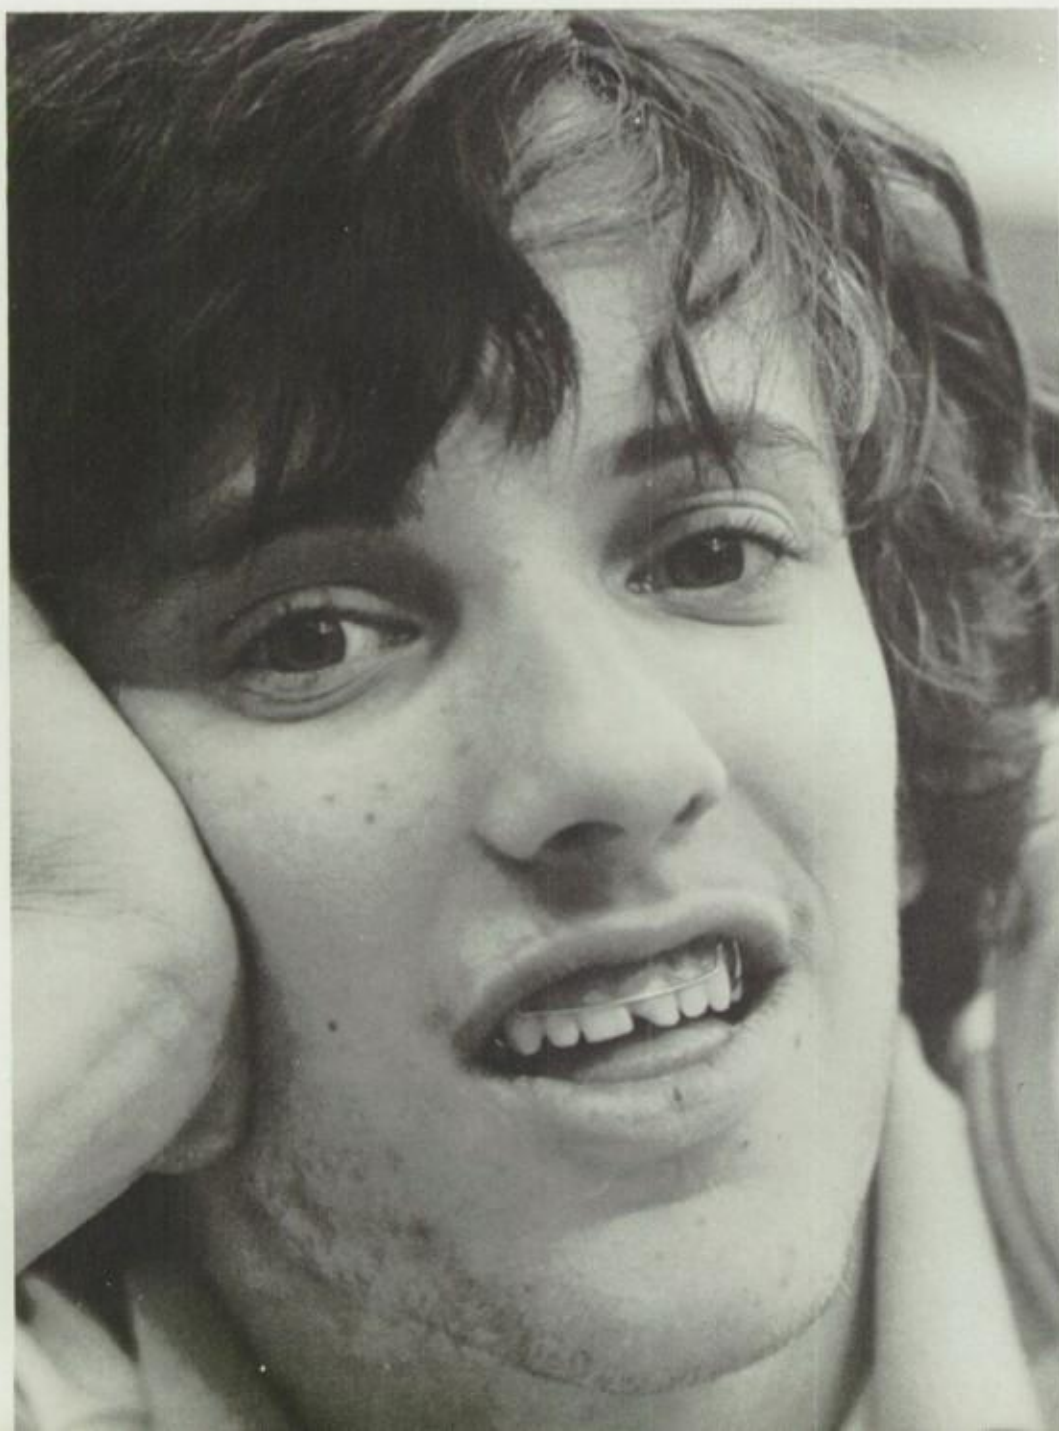

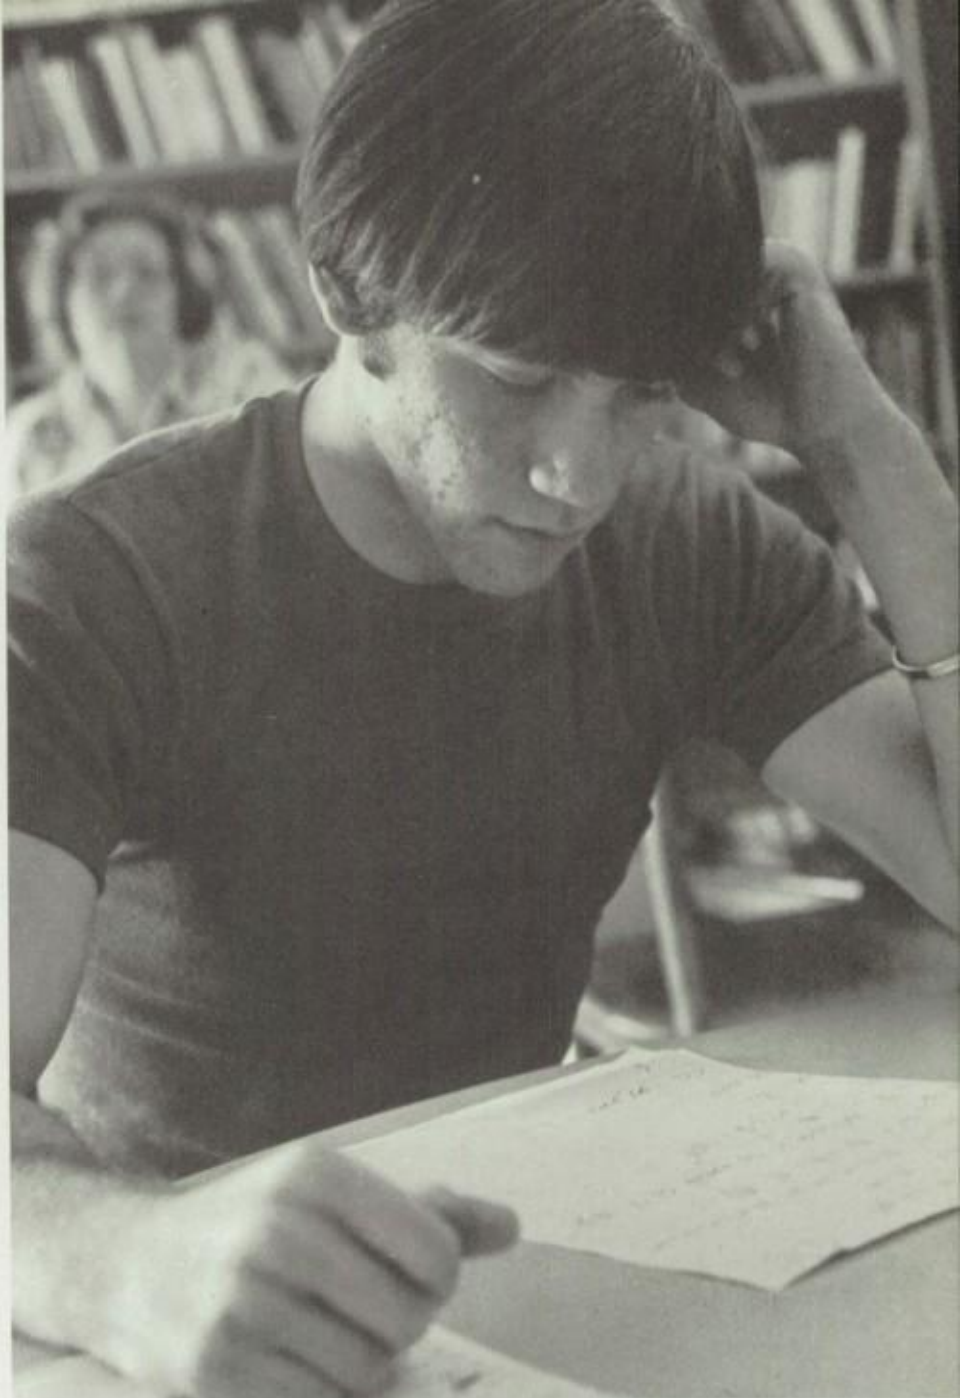

"In the civilized countries I believe there are no witches left; nor wizards, nor sorceresses, nor magicians. But, you see, the Land of Oz has never been civilized, for we are cut off from the rest of the world. Therefore, we still have witches and wizards amongst us."

"As they walked on, the green glow became brighter and brighter, and it seemed at last they were nearing the end of their travels . . . In front of them, and at the end of the road of yellow brick, was a big gate, all studded with emeralds that glittered so in the sun that even the painted eyes of the Scarecrow were dazzled by their brilliancy."

The Wonderful Wizard of Oz is America's greatest fairy tale, and Oz is its best-loved fairyland. Oz and its inhabitants have become part of the American vocabulary while the word "Oz" itself has become synonymous with wondrous, faraway places. Dorothy and her comrades are immortals, existing independently of the book in which they first appeared, and for countless readers, the fairyland through which they journey is a very real place, certainly no less real for being imaginary. In Oz, good motives, ingenuity and trust in oneself always win, although the way to victory is often rough. Oz is a proving ground in which Dorothy and her comrades develop these quintessentially American ideals.

In selecting The Wonderful Wizard of Oz as our theme, we see a modern parallel: we are all Dorothy and we are all traveling down the road of yellow brick to our own "Oz" and Emerald City. Cheltenham High School is just one stop along that road; a testing ground for our future travels to our "Oz."

"Well, Scarecrow, we have come to the end of the yellow brick road. Hasn't it been a bummer?" asked Dorothy.

"Well, yes and no," said the Scarecrow.

"I guess you're right. We've encountered a lot of obstacles and challenges. We've also had many good times in the company of our friend, the Tinman and the Lion. We learned a great deal about ourselves on our journey. Ain't that right?"

"Well, yes and no," said the Scarecrow.

“We must journey on until we find the yellow brick road”

In retrospect our years at Cheltenham have been embellished by many invigorating (a snow day) as well as trying (a pop quiz) experiences. Although education is stressed at Cheltenham, to most it is just a part of our school life: for things which occur outside the classroom are also an integral part of our learning process. We have experienced moments of frustration (no toilet paper) and moments of exhilaration (beating Abington for the third straight year.)

Dorothy, during her fabled journey down the yellow brick road encountered various types of people. To survive she learned to befriend some, ignore others and to defeat the rest. At Cheltenham we have also encountered various characters: wizards (those accepted early to Harvard), Munchkins (9th graders) and a few assorted witches (teachers.) Though Cheltenham was no Emerald City, its memory will be forever imprinted in our minds. We are now separating and departing down our own yellow brick roads. As your editor, I hope that your roads will be filled with extraordinary experiences, few obstacles and that someday you attain your pinnacle — your own Emerald City.
